CLAUDINE MIXES WITH THE DREDGER

The Wilder steamship Claudine and the channel dredger and its tender had a mix-up in the channel yesterday morning about 5:38 o'clock, which nearly resulted in disaster to the steamer. As it was, the tug Fearless had to tow the Claudine in, after the passengers and mail had been sent ashore in the steamer's boats.

The anchor, chain and other tackle of the mid-channel buoy now hangs from the propeller of the Claudine as she lies at her wharf. Divers will today determine the extent of the damage incurred by the Claudine.

Captain Parker of the Claudine attaches no blame to himself for the mishap, but rather charges it to the dredger people. At least, it was while Captain Parker was endeavoring to maneuver in the narrow quarters of the channel, partially blocked by the dredger, that he backed down upon the buoy and ripped it up. The whole trouble resulted from Captain Parker trying to avoid running down the tender of the dredger.

Captain Parker made the following statement of the mishap:

"I whistled four times, according to the requirements, that I was about to enter the channel. This signal is given to notify the dredger people in sufficient time so that they can remove whatever obstruction there may be in the channel, to permit vessels entering or leaving freedom to maneuver. It was then about 5:38 and quite dark. We went ahead slowly. When near the dredger, the tender signalled to put my wheel to starboard and pass to leeward of her. When that signal came I was almost upon the tender, which did not show up with lights from my position. She was at that time swinging around to go close to the dredger. I had no room for maneuvering, and to obey the signal was to run down the tender. I did what my instinct told me—to back, rather than crush the tender.

"When we backed the stern came full upon the mid-channel can buoy. One blade of the propeller hit the buoy. I heard the sound perceptibly, and the jar was felt in the engine room. The engineer acted promptly almost at the same time that I telegraphed 'Stop.' The telegraph pointer retains the same position now that it did at that time, and it will be left in that position for reference. However, the chain wrapped around the blade as it revolved. The buoy anchor was jerked up and still hangs back of the rudder.

"We let go our anchor and I sent the passengers and mail ashore in the steamer's boats. Afterward I whistled for the Fearless and she took the Claudine in, first to the cattle wharf, where the cattle were landed, and then to our wharf.

"It is my opinion that the dredger fails to take into consideration that we need sea-room in the channel. The dredger and tender and piles take up two-thirds of the channel, leaving us about sixty feet freeway. As the Claudine has thirty-two feet beam that leaves only fourteen feet to the clear on either side. It is not enough. I believe that the inter-island trade is of sufficient importance that we captains of the island boats should be given as much consideration as those with foreign vessels. The Argyle came in later and was given plenty of sea-room."

Among the Claudine's passengers were U. S. Inspectors of Hulls and Boilers Lehnert and Whitney, who were returning from an official inspection at Hilo and Kahului. It is believed that they entertain the same ideas as to the cause of the accident, as Captain Parker.

HAWAIIAN BOATS IN THE ORIENT

About a week ago an incoming steamer reported the four-masted barkentine Koko Head as being outside. It has since transpired that the craft referred to was the U. S. S. Vicksburg which was on her way out to sea at the time. The skipper who supplied the information has since been called upon to stand several drinks.

The four-masted barkentine Makawell arrived in port on Thursday after having had to tarry outside for several days waiting for enough water to enable her to cross the bar. The Makawell is a fine and comparatively new vessel and is named after a town in the Hawaiian Islands—Shanghai.

Elba Now at Chemulpo.

Henry Villard at Elelee discharging coal—800 tons out. Fine weather on Kauai. Crossing channel, strong N. E. winds with heavy swells.

Shipping Notes.

The Claudine brought the following cargo from Kahului: 193 sacks corn, 166 sacks paila, 38 sacks rice, 60 sacks charcoal, 68 pkgs. hides, 22 hogs, 50 head cattle, 70 pkgs. sundries.
